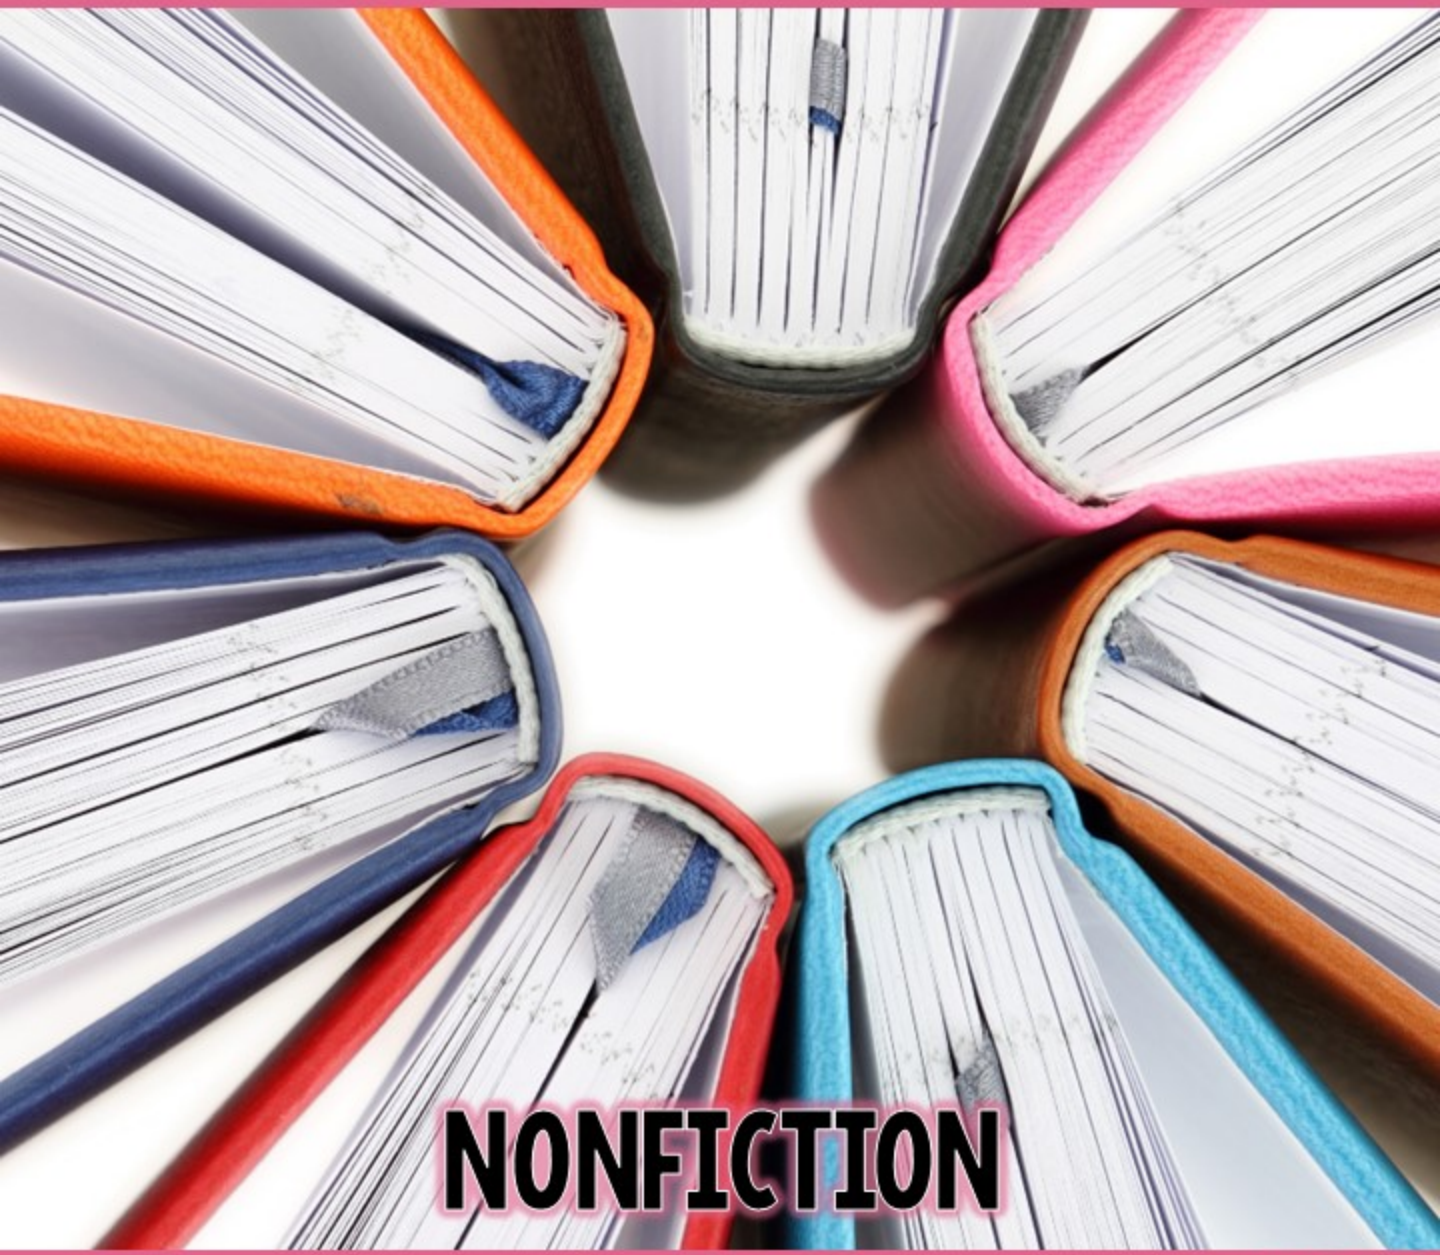
INTEGRATION OF IDEAS ASSESSMENTS



DIFFERENTIATED FOR GRADES 3-5

ideas by jivey

HOW TO USE THESE ASSESSMENTS

This pack includes tests that assess standards covering integration of knowledge and ideas. I have aligned them with Common Core, but because reading comprehension skills are assessed similarly across the board, you can easily use these even if you don't use Common Core.

In the bottom left-hand corner of each page, there is a symbol. These denote the grade level of the passage and questions.

⬢ 2nd grade ▲ 3rd grade ● 4th grade ■ 5th grade

I have written four levels of each nonfiction passage, as well as three levels of questions for each standard. This is to allow for differentiation for your learners. For instance, if a student is reading on a 3rd grade level in 5th grade, you might still give him the 5th grade questions, but give the 3rd grade passage. This will truly assess if he can perform the skill, not if he can read the passage given.

I created questions for each standard for each passage. The questions are not numbered so that you can mix and match them to create a longer test covering the skills you desire, or use them independently. I included the short passages with their grade level appropriate questions on one page*, but also on two separate pages so that you may still mix and match the passage levels and questions if you'd like.

Use these for whole group mini-lessons to model a think-aloud, independent practice, small group remediation, homework, or progress monitoring.

Enjoy!

Creating a Government

In 1775, the Revolutionary War began. The war was between the thirteen American colonies and England. The colonies wanted to be free from England. In 1776, the Declaration of Independence was signed. It declared that America was its own country. All of the colonies became states. These states formed the United States of America.

The Continental Congress was the group of representatives from each state. They knew a government was important to keep peace in the country. The Congress signed the Articles of Confederation in 1781. This document was a set of laws. These laws allowed the states to have most of the power. There was not a President of the United States. Congress was afraid a President would have too much power, like the king they had just left. The document also did not provide a federal court system. There was not a federal currency[1]. The Articles of Confederation made it hard to make any changes. It was very hard to change anything about the laws because the Articles of Confederation stated that all states had to agree. In 1787, it was clear that the Articles needed to be rewritten. There was a need for a stronger government, but the Articles limited this.

A new document was written by members of the Constitutional Convention.

George Washington was the President of the Constitutional Convention. He kept the meetings in order.

[1] currency: form of money
